LET’S DISCUSS

OPEN MINDED DISCUSSION

Quarter 3 | 10.02.2026

WHAT HAPPENS?

When Justin acts as trustee, he may manage or control assets within the trust structure, but that does not automatically mean he personally owns them.

Generally, Justin does not personally own:

- The trust bank account
- The holding LLC
- The asset LLCs
- Property owned by those LLCs
- Brokerage accounts owned by the trust structure

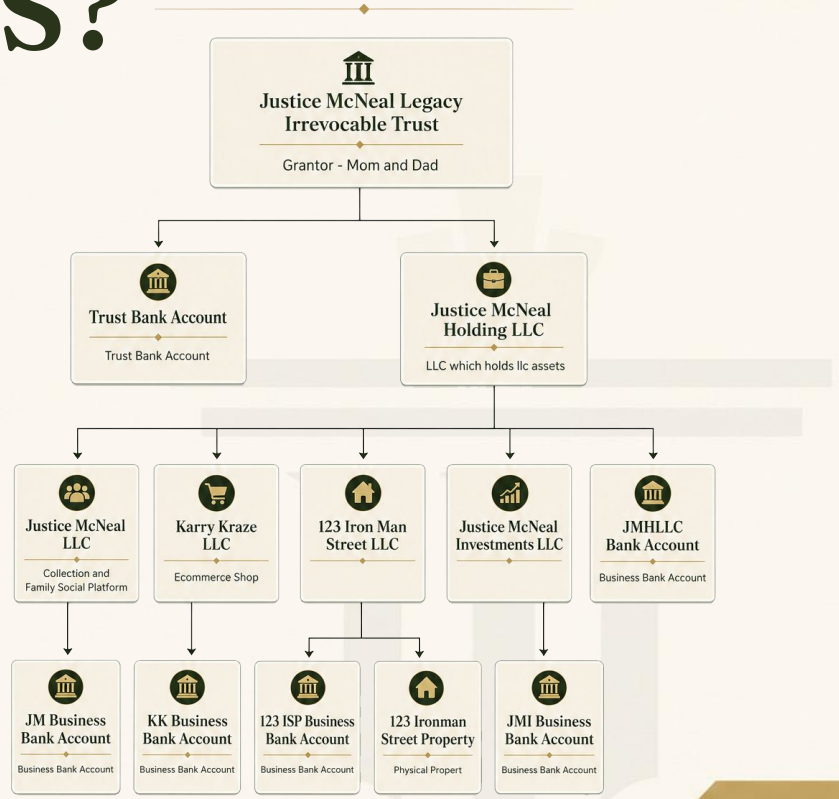

Because of this, a divorcing spouse or personal creditor usually cannot simply argue:
“Justin is the trustee, so all trust assets belong to him.”

A trustee holds control in a fiduciary role, meaning he manages assets for the trust’s purpose — not as personal property.

Instead, personal claims against Justin would usually focus on:

- Justin’s personal assets
- Any trustee or management fees he receives
- Any distributions paid directly to him
- Property he personally owns outside the trust

Key Point:
Trust assets are generally separate from Justin’s personal assets when the structure is properly created, documented, funded, and operated.

WHAT IS A TRUST? 001

Revocable Trust

A revocable trust is a trust that the grantor can change, cancel, or take assets back from during their lifetime.

The grantor usually keeps a lot of control.

Simple meaning:
"I put assets into a trust, but I can still change my mind."

Common uses:

- Avoid probate
- Organize assets
- Make inheritance smoother
- Keep affairs private
- Easier management if the grantor becomes incapacitated

Main weakness:

- Usually weak for asset protection, because the grantor still controls the assets.

Irrevocable Trust

An irrevocable trust is a trust that the grantor generally cannot freely change, cancel, or take assets back from after creating it.

The grantor gives up more control, and the trustee manages the assets based on the trust rules.

Simple meaning:
"I transferred assets into the trust, and they are no longer fully mine to take back whenever I want."

Common uses:

- Asset protection
- Legacy planning
- Estate tax planning
- Protecting assets for children/family
- Keeping assets separate from individual ownership

Main tradeoff:

- Stronger protection usually requires giving up control and personal access.

WHAT IS A TRUST? 002

Category	Revocable Trust	Irrevocable Trust
Can grantor change it?	Yes, usually anytime	Not freely
Can grantor cancel it?	Yes	Usually no
Can grantor take assets back?	Usually yes	Usually no
Asset protection	Weak	Stronger if drafted correctly
Control	Grantor keeps control	Trustee/trust rules control
Probate avoidance	Yes	Yes
Best for	Organization and estate planning	Protection and legacy planning

Key Difference

The simplest way to remember it:

Revocable = flexible but weak protection.

Irrevocable = stronger protection but less personal control.

WHAT IS A LLC?

Category	Asset LLC	Holding LLC
Purpose	Owns/operates a specific asset or business	Owns other LLCs
Example	123 Iron Man Street LLC	Justice McNeal Holding LLC
Main job	Hold property, run business, open bank account	Central ownership and management
Risk exposure	Tied to that asset/business	Parent ownership layer
Why useful	Separates each activity	Organizes the whole structure

An LLC, or Limited Liability Company, is a legal business entity that separates the business from the people who own or manage it.

If the LLC is sued, the lawsuit usually targets the LLC's assets, not automatically the personal assets of the owner or manager. Georgia law says a person is not personally liable for LLC debts solely because they are a member, manager, agent, or employee of the LLC.

ASSET RELATION

The Justice McNeal Legacy Irrevocable Trust sits at the top as the family ownership vehicle. It owns the Justice McNeal Holding LLC, which acts as the parent company and manages the separate asset LLCs.

Each asset LLC has its own purpose, bank account, records, and risk separation. For example, Justice McNeal LLC receives documented contributions, Investments LLC holds and deploys capital, 123 Iron Man Street LLC owns property and collects rent, and Karry Kraze LLC operates the business.

Money should only move between entities through documented methods such as contributions, loans, rent, reimbursements, or distributions.

Main Rule: Each entity stays in its own lane so trust money, business money, property money, and personal money remain separate.

HOME to LEGACY 001

This chart shows how a personally owned home can be sold into the Justice McNeal Legacy structure using a formal, fair-market transaction.

Step 1: Current Ownership
The married couple currently owns the house personally.

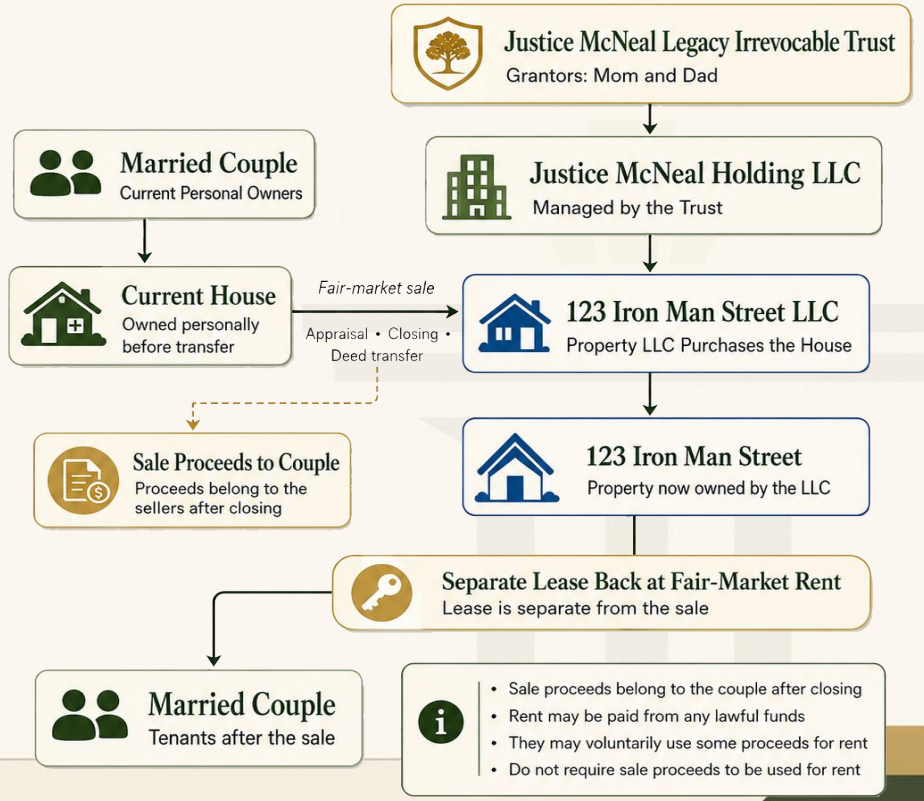

Step 2: Fair-Market Sale
The house is sold to a property LLC at fair-market value.
This should include an appraisal, closing process, and deed transfer.

Step 3: Property LLC Purchase
The property LLC, such as 123 Iron Man Street LLC, purchases the house and becomes the legal owner.

Step 4: Sale Proceeds to the Couple
After closing, the sale proceeds belong to the married couple as the sellers.

Step 5: Lease Back Arrangement
After the sale, the couple may lease the home back from the LLC at fair-market rent.

Step 6: Couple Becomes Tenants
The married couple no longer owns the house personally.
They become tenants under a separate lease agreement.

HOME to LEGACY 002

This chart shows how Justin and his spouse can make separate voluntary contributions into the Justice McNeal family structure while keeping ownership, benefits, and tenancy clearly separated.

Step 1: Separate Contributor Profiles

Justin McNeal and his spouse each maintain their own separate JMLLC profile.
Each person contributes $50 per month individually.

Step 2: Voluntary Contributions

The contributions are voluntary and should be clearly documented as:

- No ownership promise
- No guaranteed benefit
- No automatic right to property
- No refund or equity claim

Step 3: Justice McNeal LLC Receives Contributions

Justice McNeal LLC acts as the contribution receiving entity.
Its role is to collect, record, and organize family contributions.

Step 4: Justice McNeal Investments LLC Deploys Capital

Justice McNeal Investments LLC manages and deploys capital for approved uses.
This may include investments, reserves, property funding, or other approved legacy purposes.

Step 5: Funds Route Through the Family Structure

Funds are routed through the broader legacy structure in an organized and documented way.
This helps separate personal money from structure-owned funds.

Step 6: Trust and Holding LLC Oversight

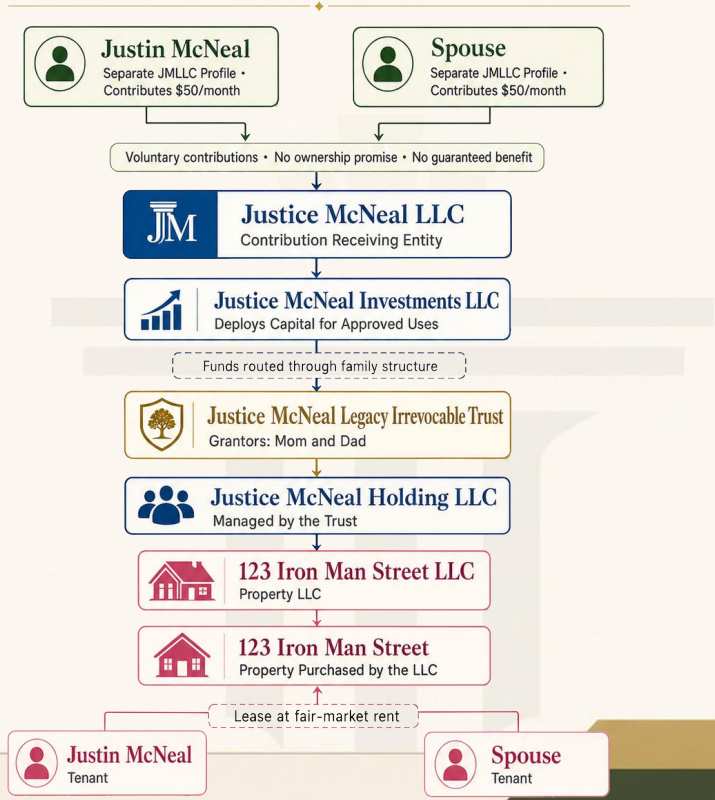

The Justice McNeal Legacy Irrevocable Trust sits above the structure.
The trust manages or controls the Justice McNeal Holding LLC, which oversees property or asset LLCs.

Step 7: Property LLC Owns the Property

The 123 Iron Man Street LLC is the property LLC.
It purchases and owns the property, rather than Justin or his spouse owning it personally.

Step 8: Lease at Fair-Market Rent

Justin and his spouse may live in the property as tenants.
They should have a separate lease and pay fair-market rent.

HOME to LEGACY 003

This chart shows how the trust-controlled investment entity can provide capital to a property LLC while keeping ownership, borrowing, repayment, and property operations clearly separated.

Step 1: Trust Creates or Owns the Property LLC

The Justice McNeal Legacy Foundation Trust owns or controls both the investment entity and the property-holding entity.
The trust creates or owns 123 Iron Man Street LLC as the separate LLC responsible for holding the property.

Step 2: Property LLC Opens Its Own Bank Account

123 Iron Man Street LLC opens a separate business bank account.
This account is used for property-related funds, including purchase money, rent income, expenses, and loan repayment activity.

Step 3: Investments LLC Borrows Against Brokerage Account

JMLT Investments LLC holds the Fidelity brokerage account.
If needed, JMLT Investments LLC may borrow against the brokerage account to access capital without directly selling investments.

Step 4: Investments LLC Loans Funds to Property LLC

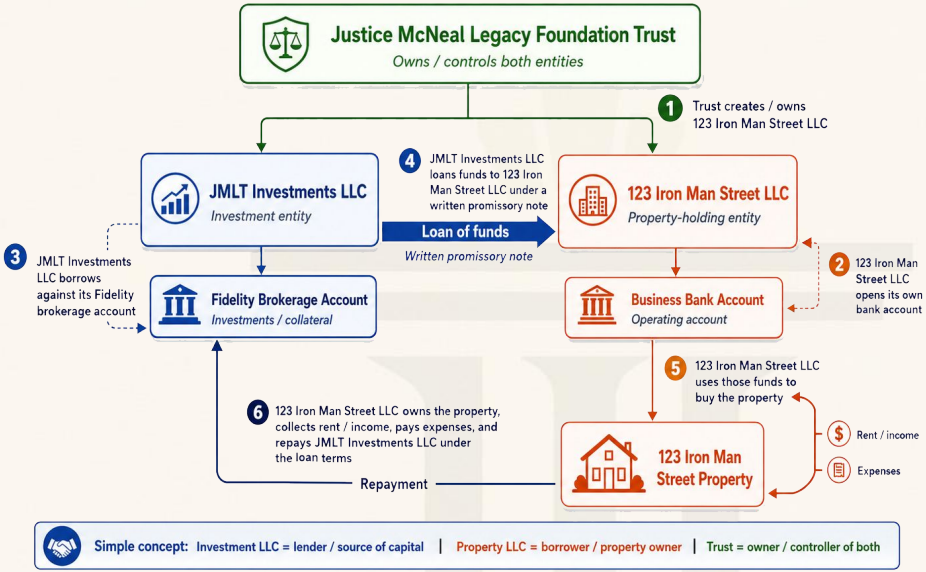

JMLT Investments LLC loans funds to 123 Iron Man Street LLC under a written promissory note.
This keeps the transaction documented as a loan, not a gift or informal transfer.

Step 5: Property LLC Uses Funds to Buy the Property

123 Iron Man Street LLC uses the loaned funds to purchase the property.
After purchase, the property is owned by the property LLC, not personally by Justin or any individual family member.

Step 6: Property LLC Operates and Repays the Loan

The property LLC collects rent or income, pays property expenses, and repays JMLT Investments LLC according to the loan terms.
